Baghdad: The City of Stories

Baghdad, the capital of Iraq, has been a center of learning and commerce for centuries. Founded in the 8th century by Caliph Al-Mansur, it quickly became a hub for scholars, poets, and traders. Its rich tapestry of history offers a perfect starting point for our exploration.

- Al-Mansur's Palace—A symbol of power, this palace is rumored to have hidden chambers that were used for secret meetings during the Abbasid era.
- The House of Wisdom—Once a beacon of knowledge, it housed scholars who translated Greek, Persian, and Indian texts into Arabic.

- Al-Mustansiriya School—Founded in 1227, it became one of the first institutions of higher learning in the world.

But beyond the grand architecture lies a more clandestine narrative: the stories of underground tunnels that were used to smuggle manuscripts and people during times of war. These tunnels, some say, still echo with whispers of the past—an audible reminder of the city's resilience.

From the Desert to the Delta: The Journey Continues

Leaving Baghdad, our journey takes us across the Middle East, through the rugged landscapes of Syria, into the bustling markets of Cairo, and finally across the Atlantic Ocean. Each stop offers its own flavor of intrigue, from the opulent palaces of Egypt to the colonial architecture of the Caribbean.

Along the way, we encounter stories that echo the theme of the armed madhouse—places that once served as prisons, fortresses, or centers of power, now repurposed into museums, hotels, or cultural centers. These sites preserve the memory of their past while inviting new narratives to unfold.

New Orleans: The City of Sordid Secrets

While the term often refers to the U.S. President's residence, in the context of New Orleans, it refers to a historic white house that once belonged to a wealthy plantation owner. Today, it is a museum that showcases the lives of enslaved people and the complex history of the region.
